Descriptions of Courses Taught at Rice University

(Intro to) Marketing Research (MBA elective) – Traditional, Fully Remote, and Hybrid Modalities

The course is targeted toward the manager who is the ultimate user of marketing research output and/or the person responsible for determining the scope and direction of marketing research activities within a firm. Students learn how to deal with issues confronted during the upfront stages of the marketing research process, including how to identify a useful research question, choose an appropriate research design, identify appropriate data requirements and select the appropriate data collection/sampling methods necessary to generate valid research results to support evidence-based decision making. Research methods covered in the course include qualitative methods (e.g. in-depth interviews, focus groups, corporate ethnography) and quantitative methods (test markets, surveys). Teaching methods include interactive lectures, cases, simulation and guest speakers.

Marketing Lab (MBA Experiential Learning elective)-Traditional and Fully Remote Modalities

Marketing Lab projects focus on a strategically important, marketing-related problems and challenge student-teams to apply their curriculum-based knowledge to achieve clearly articulated deliverables specified in a project charter. Students have a substantive, collaborative learning experience during the semester-long projects. No traditional lectures are offered. Instead, student teams received supportive coaching from both the Marketing Lab client and instructor.

Marketing (MBA@RICE core)-Hybrid: Asynchronous +Fully Remote Modality

Students take a strategic perspective as they learn/apply foundational principles of marketing to real-life situations. Course content includes customer designed and developed asynchronous content and synchronous content. The course format reflects a combination of recorded lectures, interactive live session discussions, scripted and non-scripted video content as well as case analyses, across a variety of industry settings.

Strategic Marketing/Marketing (MBA core & Undergraduate Core)- Traditional, Fully Remote, and Hybrid Modalities Students take a strategic perspective as they learn/apply foundational principles of marketing to real-life situations. The course format reflects a combination of lectures, interactive discussions, guest speakers and group-based case analyses, across a variety of industry settings. Students conduct an individual case analysis in lieu of a final examination.

Customer Relationship Management/Customer Relationship Management Strategy (MBA elective)- Traditional Modality

Students take a marketing manager's perspective as they examine how firms identify and manage complex issues related to managing customer relationships including acquisition, retention, customer loyalty/engagement, customer experience management, customer differentiation and customer growth/portfolio management. They explore CRM holistically by evaluating the business impact of strategic/operational and aspects CRM. Methods include includes interactive lectures, guest speakers and case studies.

Executive Seminars. Served as faculty leader for semester-long, credit-based, executive seminars; Coordinated with multiple faculty and external guest speakers/facilitators to deliver credit-based seminars that deploy various pedagogical methods and offer innovative, curriculum content.
